

I have a standardized measurement system for most grips, and put the measurements on the website listings for each grip. While it doesn't pin down every dimension, it gives you a very good idea of whether the grip will fit your gun. Just check the listings, and compare the same measurements with your present grips or the grip frame of your gun. If mine are larger, then you can sand them to fit. If mine are smaller, they won't work.

If you send me a tracing, it is helpful if you can send both left and right side. Then I can cut out your drawing and make two templates, and test them against my molds or grips I may have recently made in them. It also helps if you can give me as much info as possible about the gun, since I may find something faster by association with a similar frame on another model or even another make.

How to send a tracing for better match to your gun:

For flat backed grips with two separate panels:

Remove the grips from your gun, and make a pencil tracing around the outside on a piece of paper. On two-piece grips, indicate where the screw hole is located.

For one-piece early Colt style grips (replicas from Uberti, etc):

Remove the grips from your gun, and cut a cardboard (card stock) template that matches the grip frame, so that if I match that template to the back side of the grips before they are joined together with the spacer block, the grips would fit exactly like yours do now. Pay careful attention to the front and top (the straight parts) for length, and the curve. If I send you grips that are larger, you can sand them to fit this template. If your template is too small, the grips may also be too small.

Send this original drawing, not a photocopy or a fax (which distorts the size) to Tombstone Gun Grips along with the following:

1. Your actual name and address for shipping.
2. Your e-Bay name, if applicable, so I can cross-reference it.
3. Your e-mail address, so I can attach it to any e-mails you sent.
4. The most complete description you can give me of your gun and the grips that you want for it. Give me the model, serial (or enough to ID the age of the gun), barrel length, any details you can think of to ID the gun.

Let me know if you would be willing to accept any pattern of grip that fits, or only one specific design. I may have a good checkered pattern but nothing in a smooth, for example (or vice versa).
